The area around Tucumcari was very significant during the Triassic Period, known as the dawn of the dinosaurs. Dinosaur fossils and footprints are very common here. Fossils from Quay County are in museums around the country, including Mesalands Community College Dinosaur Museum.

Tucumcari, originally called Six Shooter Siding, was a tent city at the foot of 4,999-foot high Tucumcari Mountain for the Rock Island Railroad. Tucumcari owes it beginnings to a snowstorm and the railroad. In 1900, two men stayed with A.D. Goldenburg during a horrible three-week snow storm. In return for Goldenburg’s hospitality, the two men told him that a railroad would soon be going through the area establishing a stop four miles from Goldenberg’s home. Goldenburg, his brother, Max and two other businessmen, purchased property where they felt the railroad would have to lay tracks.

By 1902, four passenger trains, two mail trains and two freight trains made daily stops at the new city. By 1910, almost 70 businesses had been established. Soon you will be able to visit the Train Museum, which will be a part of the Historic Railroad Depot located downtown off of Main Street.

When Route 66 was built through the town more than 75 years ago, the community began to thrive. The original “Main” street still runs through historic downtown Tucumcari. The local MainStreet Project is working hard on its goal to develop the historic downtown district as an arts and theater district centered around the historic train depot.

Old Route 66 still winds its way through Tucumcari. The neon lit signs down the boulevard and the vintage motels and restaurants are just a few of the town’s landmarks which continue as living legacies. The murals on the walls and in the buildings around town are Tucumcari’s newest landmarks.

ELEVATION: 4,085 feet

How Tucumcari Got its Name

Tucumcari is thought to be among the oldest place names in New Mexico. While the real origin and meaning of Tucumcari in not known for certain, most historians and linguists believe that it is derived from a Plains Indian term, meaning lookout point or signal peak.

T.M. Pearce, an English professor at the University of New Mexico, researched the origin of Tucumcari. He believed that Elliot Canonge, an Oklahoma linguist, had the most convincing explanation. Canonge believed that the name comes from the Comanche tukamukaru which means to lie in wait for someone or something to approach. According to Felix Kowena, Canonge’s Comanche informant, Tucumcari Mountain was frequently used as a lookout by Comanche war parties. The mountain peak was an excellent lookout point since it can be seen from the Texas Panhandle more than 50 miles away.

According to Herman Moncus, a local historian, another possible meaning for the word comes from the Jemez Indians who lived in the Rio Grande Valley, but hunted in eastern New Mexico before 1800. Moncus believed Tucumcari can be translated from the Jemez language to a place of the buffalo hunt. Moncus’ research determined that the Jemez Indians probably learned the name from other tribes and it could be a name surviving from the pre-Indian or paleo-Indian periods.

On a less scholarly note, in 1907, a Methodist minister created a story about how the name evolved. The two finest warriors of an Apache tribe that made their home at the mountain met in combat to determine who would succeed their dying Chief Wautonomah. The survivor would also win the hand of the chief’s daughter, Kari. Tocom, the brave loved by Kari, was slain by Tonopah in the battle. Overcome with grief and rage, Kari seized her knife, killed Tonopah and took her own life. Heartbroken at this tragic turn of events, the old chief stabbed himself, crying out as he died, “Tocum-Kari, Tocom-Kari.” This story is what became known as “The Legend of Tucumcari.”

TUCUMCARI HISTORICAL MUSEUM
The Tucumcari Historical Museum houses thousands of items located on three floors of a 1903 school house. Forty-five thousand square feet of native landscaped grounds paint a picture of early western life in this area from cowboy memorabilia to pioneer kitchens, from old-time nickelodeons to Indian artifacts dating back to 12,000 B.C. With four outdoor and indoor exhibits arranged in storytelling fashion and with care to details, visitors can walk away feeling that they fully know Tucumcari’s past.

MESALANDS DINOSAUR MUSEUM
Mesalands Community College’s Dinosaur Museum has the largest collection of bronze prehistoric skeletons in the world. These bronzes, unlike the resin models in most museums, are very resilient and invite the visitor to interact by touching. The museum is also home to many fossils, figures, and minerals representing the unique paleontology and geology of the region. This museum was the first in the world to exhibit the 30-foot long torvosaurus skeleton as its centerpiece.
This meat-eating relative of the tyrannosaurus rex from the Jurassic Period, stood 15-feet tall and weighed three tons. With teeth four to six inches long, this powerful creature must have been one of the most fearsome of the dinosaur age.
See the world’s only bronze representation of a six-foot tall struthiomimus, an ostrich-like bird-dinosaur. Explore lost worlds at Mesalands Dinosaur Museum where you can imagine when dinosaurs ruled the earth!

TUCUMCARI IS A “CITY OF MURALS”
There are more than 40 murals in and around Tucumcari and Quay County. Most of these beautiful works of art have been created by Doug and Sharon Quarles, local artists. These artists have taken blank external walls on the buildings around town and turned them in to colorful, detailed paintings depicting different “things” about our area. You will be amazed!

Ask for a Mural Map Guide at any local motel or restaurant or at the Chamber of Commerce.
You can tour the murals and then visit one of our great restaurants for a delicious meal or take in a movie at the “Historic Odeon Theatre” located at 123 S. 2nd Street.
